The 4 forms in -en are inherited, according to period and dialect, the OE flēa, flēah, and the 8 forms the OE pl. flugon. The 5 forms are transferred to the strong from the pl. and sing. pple. The origin of the 6 form flewe, which now alone survives, is more difficult to account for, possibly it arose from a confusion with Flow (OE flōwan), with which this vb had in the 15th c. come to coincide in sense. The 7 forms are of howsoever somewhat rare occurrence in the vb. slay, pa. t. slew, for which no parallel explanation can be given

The Lat word was first used in sense 1 by Kepler in Astron pars optica iv 4, written 1604, his reason for the choice of the name is not stated, but it is conjectured that the optical sense 2, burning point of a lens or mirror (which is easily derived from the Lat sense) must have been already in existence, this would account for Kepler's use, as the 'burning point' or 'focus of a parabolic mirror is situate at the geometrical 'focus' of its characteristic Sense 4 is from medical Latin In all senses cf. Fr foyer.—L 'focārium f focus]

1 Geom a. In plane geometry. Any one of a pair of points from which the distances to any point of a given curve are connected by a linear relation

Also defined as a point from which a pair of isotropic tangents can be drawn to a curve, or as the intersection of tangents from the points in which the line at infinity meets a circular conic (For definitions specially relating to the circle, see quots 1881 and 1893.)

The Teut adj faxho-* (represented only in W Ger) is referred to the Aryan root peyq-* poq- puq-, whence Olrish cuch enemy: —pōqrós sharp, bitter, Lith pīkis angry. The current statement that the word is etymologically akin to FIEND depends on the doubtful hypothesis that the root peyq-* is an extension of yei-* to hate]

Foil (foil), sb[5] Forms 6–7 foile, foyle, 8 file, 7– foil [Of obscure origin

Usually regarded as f Foil v.1 and as denoting etymologically 'a sword with the point foiled or blunted' But the vb does not appear to have meant 'to blunt' the reading of the quarto in Otb I iii 2001 (even if genuine) does not admit of this interpretation Another suggestion is that the phrase at foils originally belonged to Foil sb[2] in the sense of parrying, and that the name of the instrument was evolved from the phrase It is noteworthy that Foil sb occurs in 17th c in the sense of foil, possibly (in spite of the want of evidence) this goes back to the 16th c, so that foil might be an etymological doublet of file (Foil v.)

Fold, var form of FOLD, -fold, suffix (OE. -feald, Northumb -fald, ME -fald, -fold), corresponds to OFris, OS. -fald (Du -vond), OHG -falt (MHG -valt, mod.Ger. -falt), ON -faldr (Sw -fald, Da -fold), Goth -falps, cognate with FOLD v 1, and with the equivalent Gr -πλασιος, -πλοος, also, more remotely, with Gr -πλο- in ἁπλόος single, διπλόος double (= L duplus), and probably with the L. (uni-, du-, tri-) plex Like the Gr and L. equivalents, the OE. suffix is appended to cardinal numerals (and adjs meaning 'many'), forming adjs of which the primary sense is 'folded in two, three, four, etc,' or 'plaited of two, three, four, etc strands' (cf. 'a threefold cord'), but which serve also and chiefly as arithmetical multiplicatives The OE. forms, twi-, twoe-, tweofeald, þrifeald, fyþerfeald, which retain the combining form of the cardinal inherited from OTeut., were superseded in early ME. by new formations on the analogy of fivefold, etc, where the cardinal has the ordinary form.

The adjs were already in OE. used absol in the neut. (e g þrifeald threefold, three times as much) and as advbs (=doubly, triply, etc.), and these uses still continue. In OE. the adverbial notion was also expressed by phrases like be fiftealdum, be manig fealdum, in later Eng † by fivefold, by manyfold. The introduction of the Romanic synonyms treble and treble or treple, to which were afterwards added the adapted Latin quadruple, quintuple, etc, has considerably narrowed the use of the derivatives in -fold; indeed the latter seem to be (in many dialects) no longer current among illiterate people. The educated use the strictly multiplicative sense survives chiefly in the adv and quasi-sb, and with reference to somewhat large numbers ('He has repaid me fivefold' is a thousandfold worse'), the adjs express rather a plurality of things more or less different, than mere quantitative multiplication cf 'a double charm' with 'a two fold charm'

In ME a few new and unanalogical compounds were formed with the suffix, as thickefold (=frequent, -ly), tonlefe-fold, but these did not survive into the modern period Of the nonce combinations, formed by attaching fold to indefinite numerals, interrogatives, and the like, the following quots afford examples

†Fo'lkland. Obs exc Hist A term of OE law, designating land held by a certain kind of tenure, opposed to Bookland

As to the nature of the antithesis between folkland and bookland these have been many conjectures. Since the publication of Allen's Inquiry into the Growth of the Royal Prerogative, 1830, the prevailing view has been that Folkland was land held according to the state, which the king or the witan might grant to a person for his life, but which did not descend to heirs, while bookland was land held by charter or deed But in the Eng Hist Rev VIII (1893) Prof Vinogradoff has forcibly argued that folkland was simply land heritable by folkright or common law, while the estate in bookland was conferred by charter or deed, and could be alienated freely a 1000 Laws Edgar § 2 Obbe on boc lande obbe on folc lande 1841 Termes de la Ley 54 His land was held with more ease and certainty by tradition ... than folkland 1767 Blackstone Comm II 91 Folk land ... was held by no assurance in writing, but distributed among the common folk or people by the sole discretion of the lord. 1830 J. Allen A Prerog (1849) 135 Folkland, as the word imports, was the land of the folk or people. It was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common, or possessed in severalty; and, in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out to individuals in the folcgemôt But while it continued to be folkland, it could not be alienated in perpetuity ... and therefore, on the expiration of the estate to which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and was again distributed by the same authority 1871 R. Parkinson Early Laws (1876) IV xvii 24 The folkland, the common land of the nation, was now [1066-7] changed, fully and for ever, into terra Regis, the land of the King

Follow (fɒ·lǝu), sb [f. next verb]

1 The action of the verb FOLLOW

1870 HARDY & WARE Mod. Hoyle, Dominoes 93 It is sometimes an advantage to hold heavy dominoes, as they not unfrequently enable you to obtain what is called a good 'follow'. 1889 Spectator 9 Nov. 635/1 And hark! the wave hollo i 'Tis Mack in full follow

2. Billiards A stroke which causes the player's ball to roll on after the object-ball which it has set in motion. Called also follow-stroke, and following stroke. Also, the impulse given to the ball by such a stroke

1873 BENNETT & CAVENDISH Billiards 321 The reason for playing with side is that, when the balls are so close, sufficient 'follow' cannot be obtained. 1881 H. W. CAVENDISH Mod. Billiards 38 The follow stroke Ibid 39 The 'follow' can also be executed with the cue delivered as far as one fourth below centre

3 Follow on Cricket The act of 'following on' (see FOLLOW v. 19 d), also applied to the innings itself Also simply follow.

1881 Standard 14 June 3/8 A 'follow on' was necessary 1884 Lillywhite's Cricket Ann. 60 With the follow saved there was no chance of a continuation of the game 1892 Val Reo 9 July 33/1 In the follow on things altered very much

Follow (fɒ·lǝu), v. Forms a 1–2 folgian, 2–3 folʒie(n, (folʒhi, folezе(n, (folezi), 3 follen, folhen, 2–4 folʒe(n, (3 Orm folʒhenn, 4 south uolʒe(n, uolʒy), 3–5 folew(en, (3 south uolewen, 4 follow,e), folwe(n, (4 follwe,n), folu(n, folu-we,en, (3 south uoluwenn), 4–6 folowe(n, foloe, (5 folwe(n, fologe, folouge, 4 6 followe(n, foolow(e), 6 Sc follaw, 4–7 followe, 4 follow β 1–2 fylʒan, fylʒan, fylʒan, fylian, 2–3 fulʒen, (3 south pa t vuledе), 3–4 fulu(n, fil-ʒe(n, flij(en, flyh(en, flyh(en, folu(n, 4–5 flow, fylow, felow, 5 floe [The two OE types, folʒan (o- stem) and fylgan (-jo- stem), are, as is usual in similar pairs of conjugational variants, representatives of an O1eut vb of the -ʃjan class, cf. OHG folgta, folta, fulta, Os folgin (Du volgen), OHG folgen MHG volgen, mod.G folgen), ON fylgja (Da følge, Sw följa), not recorded in Goth Beside these forms, several of the Teut langs have synonymous and phonetically resembling words which are compounds of GAN and Go ubs, OE has fulgangan, pa t ful-ēode (from ēode, serving as pa t of gān) = OS fulgangan, OHG folle gēn The most natural explanation of these parallel forms is that the apparently simple vb was originally a compound or a phrasal combination The first element is found in OE fylstan, fullestan, OHG follesten to help, succour, minister to (cf Goth laistjan to follow), OHG follaziohan to assist, support (= OE. fullīcan*, whence fulltam, fulltum assistance), Goth fullaihjan to worship, serve, minister to the needs of In these cases the prefix seems to add to the sense of the simple vbs the notion of doing something by way of service to another (so that sense 3 of the present vb is probably nearest to the original meaning) It is on formal grounds probable that the prefix is identical with FULL, its function in the above-cited instances is perh. due to the circumstance that in some vbs compounded with it the primary sense of 'satisfying' developed into the cognate sense of 'ministering to', 'serving']

I trans [In OE and early ME. the object is usually in the dative case.]

5 A popular name for any costly structure considered to have shown folly in the builder

R Wendover says that when (in 1228) a castle which Hubert de Burgh had begun to build, near the Welsh border, had to be razed to the ground on account of a treaty concluded with the Welsh, much amusement was excited by the recollection that Hubert had given to the building on its foundation the name of 'Folebrigge' (= folie Huberti) It was remarked that he had shown himself a true prophet Probably the word used by Hubert was Folie (in the original meaning seems to have been not stultitia, but 'delight', 'favourite abode' Many houses in France still bear the name La Folie, and there is some evidence that the Folly was also in early times a favourite used in some parts of England for a public pleasure garden or the like.

3 The device of a 'fool's cap' used as a watermark for paper

It has been asserted that the fool's cap mark was introduced by Sir John Spilman, or Spielman, a German who built a paper mill at Dartford in 1580, but we have failed to find any trustworthy authority for this statement. The first MS. copy of Rushworth's Hist. coll. (1659) is marked with this device. The manuscript, called by Sotheby (Princ. III) a 'fool's cap', and said by him to occur in some copies of Caxton's Golden Legend, seems not to be correctly so called. Mr. Gilbert Scott Anderson (1877) states that examples of the fool's cap, dating from 1470, are found in a German collection there exhibited. There is no foundation for the often repeated story that the Stamp Parliament ordered a fool's cap to be substituted for the royal arms in the watermark of the paper used for the journals of the House.

1795 Denne in Archæologia XII 121 The Fool's cap is not in either the Paston Letters or Mr Ord's Plates. The date of that device in Mr Hesbert's is late as 1667

The use of for as a conj has not been found earlier than the 12th c The older lang supplied the place of the conj locutions in which for prep governed a neuter demonstrative pronoun followed by a relative particle for ðon be, for ðy be, etc (see FOR-THON, FOR-THY) The conjunctional use of for for ðon be may be explained either as an extension of the functions of the prep, to govern a noun sentence, or as in ellipsis.

In OF for and fors seem to have been used indiscriminately as preps, in ME they were gradually differentiated]

For-, pref 1. Also † fer-, 3 Orm forr-, 3–4 south. vor-, ver-, 4 fur-, 6–7 fore- [OE for-, fur- — OFris for-, fer-, OS for-, far- (Du ver-), OHG far-, fir-, fer- (MHG and mod G ver-), ON. for- (Sw for-, Da. for-), the ON fyrer- (see Fore- pref) though formally distinct, often corresponds in use with this prefix The OE form (like the forms quoted) seems to represent (with obscured vowel) a root-form (with absence of stress) the three OTeut prefixes for-, fur- (Goth fair-, faúr-, faúr-), which correspond formally to Gr περι-, προ-, παρα-, representing various ablaut-grades of the Aryan root pr-* see For and Fore. Functionally, the three prefixes do not seem to be clearly distinguished even in Gothic; but in most cases when a vb with OE for- or Ger ver- has a Goth equivalent, the prefix appears as fra-, which seems to have been orig its stressed form of the two OE forms fra-eat and forcit (see Forget), which are believed to be mutual variants of the representative of pre-Teut. progento-*, despicable
From the predominant meaning of the root, it may be inferred that the primary notion expressed by the prefix is that of 'forward, forth' The various uses in the Teut langs may be plausibly explained as originating from this, though the exact process of their development is in many points uncertain see Grimm's Deutsches Wörterbuch The vbs formed with this prefix often correspond in signification to Gr vbs formed with one or other of the cognate prefixes περι-, προ-, παρα-, and to Lat vbs with per or pro-]
A prefix used to form verbs and adjs., primarily occurring in OE words of Com Teut or WGer origin, but employed in the formation of new words down to the beginning of the mod Eng. period, it is now entirely obsolete Its various functions are enumerated below The words here explained and illustrated are all obsolete; the surviving words formed with the prefix, and those obsolete ones which require extended treatment, are given as main words in their alphabetical place.

I. Forming verbs.

1. Prefixed to verbs, giving the additional sense of 'away', 'off', as in FORCAST; forshake, to shake off; forshoot, to cast off, reject; forthrow, to throw off.

a1300 L. E. Prailer cviii [cix] 23 For schaken [Vulg excutiat] al- gressop a 1300 Cursor M 13663 Cott \ Quen tesus wist him þus for scotten* 1390 Vyenb 86 Zuo þet he ne may hit uorþrawe* to his wylle [mistranslation of si qua illa sen peuit pat patiter dehors a sa voulenté]

2. With the sense of prohibition, exclusion, or warding off, as in FORBID; forsun, to bar by running; forsay, to renounce, exclude by command. Also with the sense of concealing from view: forcover, FORWRAP

In this use the sense closely approaches that of FOR \, FORE \, of FOR(E)BEN, FOR(E)NIMED

11 Physics, etc Used in various senses developed from the older popular uses, and corresponding to most scientific uses of I vis

a (= Newton's vis impressa cf sense 5) An influence (measurable with regard to its intensity and determinable with regard to its direction) operating on a body so as to produce an alteration or tendency to alteration of its state of rest or of uniform motion in a straight line, the intensity of such an influence as a measurable quantity

Recent physicists mostly retain the word merely as the name for a measure of change of motion, not as denoting anything objectively existing as a cause

1665 Sanderson Wks 274 It will be better, the Force that moveth the Weight upwards perpendicularly being given, to seek the Force that moveth it along the Inclined Plain. 1686 Newton Prin Law June in Blackett Life I 440 In one of my papers above fifteen years ago, the proportion of the forces of the planets from the sun, re ciprocally duplicate, in distances from him, was expressed 1803 J Wood Princ Mech 15 Whatever changes, or tends to change, the state of rest or uniform rectilinear motion of a body, is called force 1866 Argyll Reign Law II (ed 4) 72 All the particles of matter exert an attractive force upon each other 1871 B Stewart Heat § 21 The force of gravity is somewhat greater in London than at Paris. 1876 Tait Props in Nat Phys Sc (1885) 157 Unit force is that force which whatever be its source, produces unit momentum in unit of time

c The cause of any one of the classes of physical phenomena, e g of motion, heat, electricity, etc, conceived as consisting in principle or power inherent in, or coexisting with, matter; such principles or powers regarded generically

According to the now prevailing view that all physical changes in modes of motion, force in its generic sense comes to denote the one principle of which the separate forces are specific forms. Cf Energy 11, no longer encouraged as belonging to the technical language of physics.

1732 Berkeley Alciphr VII § 9 Force is that in bodies which produces motion and other sensible effects] 1842 Sir Grove Corr Phys Forces (1846) 8, I therefore use the term Force as meaning that active principle inseparable from matter which induces its various changes Ibid 21 If Heat be a force capable of producing motion, and motion be capable of producing the other modes of force 1851 Carpenter Man Phys (ed 2) 10 A large number of phenomena resulting from the agency of forces as distinct from those of Physics and Chemistry, as they are from each other the forces from whose operation we assume them to result, are termed vital forces

Fore, obs pa t of FARE

Fore-, prefix In OE the adv FORE (like its equivalent in various other Teut langs) was used as a prefix (1) to verbs, giving the additional sense of 'before' (either in time, position, order, or rank), and (2) to sbs either forming designations of objects or parts of objects occupying a front position, or expressing anteriority in time Cf OE foreweðan, Goth faurawiþan, OHG forawetan to predict, OE forgangan, Goth faurgaggan to precede, OE forlíðe, Ger vorzahn front tooth, etc) The prefix has through all stages of the language continued to be a living formative in all its uses The principal combinations are in this work treated as Main words in their alphabetical place, those which are of merely occasional use, or self explanatory, are enumerated in this article

I In verbs, ppl adjs, agent-nouns and nouns of action (Stress on the verb)
